62. The International Research Institute for Climate and Society (IRI) is working with the UN World Food Programme (WFP) in Madagascar to strengthen national capacities and systems for climate risk management, based on the generation, use and integration of tailored climate forecasts and triggers into Standard Operating Procedures (SOPs) for early action against agricultural drought. On January 11th, 2021, Rahel Diro - Senior Staff Associate, Daniel Osgood - Research Scientist, Souha Ouni - Staff Associate, Azhar Ehsan - Postdoc Research Scientist, Remi Cousin- Data Library Manager, Aaron Kaplan - Senior Analyst/Programmer, and Igor Khomyakov - Systems Analyst/Programmer of the IRI conducted an initial stakeholder consultation workshop to review the forecast information and initial setup of a forecast based triggering Maproom. The consultation workshop is the first of a series of consultations aimed to co-design and solicit strategic partner feedback on the model being pursued, including the forecasts, triggers, and contingency plans.

64. On December 21 and 22, 2020, Rahel Diro, Senior Research Associate and Daniel Osgood, Research Scientist at the International Research Institute for Climate and Society (IRI), along with stakeholders at WFP, performed a virtual technical training session on weather index insurance design with local experts and stakeholders in Ethiopia. This year, WFP-Ethiopia is scaling the R4 Rural Resilience Initiative programme to hundreds of new villages aiming to insure half a million people. The workshop introduced new tools and co-design processes whereby local stakeholders took the lead to design the insurance products. Tools and technologies developed for this training are made possible by IRI's ACToday project. The programming team included FI members, IRI Data Library and Information Technologies, and Columbia University Data Science Institute students.

67. July 2020. Co-facilitated a webinar presenting the products of the Next Generation of Drought Index (NGDI) project. The NGDI project is a research consortium led by IRI with the International Water Management Institute (IWMI) and AIR Worldwide, funded and coordinated by the World Bank's Crisis & Disaster Risk Finance (CDRF) team. The project focuses on moving the needle in drought risk financing for a science-based, locally co-designed, transparent approach to index design using a Senegal use case. The project is part of a new generation of local co-design processes and is integrated with ACToday's work on transforming how IRI partners, such as WFP, scale index insurance. Led by the Financial Instruments Sector Team (FIST), several units at and beyond IRI provided expertise and products to the project, including the IRI Data Library, the Climate Group, Media, IT, and the Sector Teams, as well as the Columbia University Water Center. The World Bank and European Space Agency (ESA) hosted the webinar, and over 200 stakeholders from various organizations have participated, including European Space Agency (ESA), The World Bank, International Financial Corporation (IFC), IWMI, AIR Worldwide, WFP, African Risk Capacity (ARC), UN-OCHA, European Commission Joint Research Center (JRC), Red Cross, START Network, Agriculture and Climate Risk Enterprise Ltd. (ACRE) and several others.

68. On June 29th, 2020, Dan Osgood, Research Scientist, Rahel Diro, Senior Staff Associate, Bristol Powell, Staff Associate, Manuel Brahm, Staff Associate, and Nitin Magima, Senior Staff Research Assistant at IRI, along with Sandra Baptista, Senior Staff Associate at CIESIN and WFP Mozambique, performed a virtual technical training session on weather index insurance with local experts and stakeholders in Mozambique. WFP Mozambique is implementing the R4 Rural Resilience Initiative in the provinces of Tete and Gaza, through a dry run of weather index insurance. This training focuses on the outcomes of this dry run, and how those outcomes lead to next steps by using prototype interactive materials and design tools. The programming team included FI members, IRI Data Library and Information Technologies, and Columbia University students. This session was the initial session of a series of modules that will collectively contribute to the creation of a pool of national experts from both the public and private sectors in Mozambique that will help sustain over time the availability of expertise for the use of index insurance.

69. The Financial Instruments Sector Team at IRI performed two virtual design workshops (May 5, 6) with local designers in Amhara and Tigray Ethiopia, addressing critical issues in this year's WFP-R4 index insurance scaling by using prototype tele-design tools made possible by ACToday. The programming team included FI members, IRI data library and Information Technologies, and students from the Computer Science Department. The local experts at REST, ORDA, local universities, and government agencies will test the design tools and provide feedback as they use the tools to address the design questions that they raised for this year's scaling.
